7 Punchy Powder Room Ideas From AD PRO Directory Designers

If there's anywhere in the home to make a statement, it's in a powder room—and these designers prove why

For some, bold prints and paints might be too much for larger, heavy-use spaces like kitchens and bedrooms—but they do provide perfect powder room ideas. Often reserved for those convivial occasions when guests come over, these less-trafficked petite rooms are just the place to transcend neutrals and make a statement with riskier design schemes. In these seven half-baths, designers listed on the AD PRO Directory took imaginative leaps, treating each one as a wowing blank canvas.

Hand-plastered walls custom tinted a velvety gray wrap the powder bath in a San Francisco Bay Area family's retreat on the east shore of Lake Tahoe. One of the few rooms in the home without a window, it was an opportunity for designer Mead Quin to conjure an atmosphere that was "beautifully aged, moody, and romantic," says the principal and founder of the eponymous Emeryville, California, studio. "We chose pieces and finishes that felt lived-in. The combination of movement and textures played a big role in making the small space feel special." The Pyrolave lava stone vanity, for example, is anchored by a Quin-designed base brought to life by Rocky Mountain Hardware, and the Gregorius Pineo mirror finished in hammered metal is straddled by dark pewter sconces from Remains Lighting.
